

Heartbroken

Madison Harrell

You had my heart in the palm of your hands,
I never thought you'd throw it in the wind like grains of sand.
You told me you loved me like a really sweet guy
But when the words left your lips, they tasted like a sugar-coated lie
The passenger seat of your car was my second home,
Now here I sit in my car all alone.
You took my heart and broke it right in two
But after everything, I still love you...

I still love you more than a husband loves his wife
I still want you around the rest of my life
So for now, I'll act like you do
I'll act like I never loved you.
Act cold and bitter and push you to the side,
Sit here like everything is always going to be fine.
And even though you broke my heart
I'll forever hate it now that we're apart.
Even though I know your memory will always be with me,
I still hope and pray that one day my mind and heart will be free.
Now that you've opened up a side I never thought would be awoken,
You've left me here, crying on the floor, Heartbroken.
