

The Environment of Growing up

Inequality is a mockery in a land that is free

Some people can even walk down the street

It all feels discrete

The sexist people say woman can't wear pants

Just so men can get a glance of what's underneath a girls skirt

That how the world works

It how the birds chirp

How millions of things work

People think it so grand to live in a free land

To me it seems bland

No one can move how they please

Some people are forced on their knees

As they beg and plead

For what do I know I am white and a girl

I am half way privileged

But silenced when I speak out of turn

When will men learn all woman of race and size are equally amazing

Given the chance that you will even glance at us

Long enough to realize what you can really see

Anybody can achieve greatness if given the chance

Most people give up on us at first glance

People color are the same as regular people

But now in history I see that wasn't the case

White people made fun of them for there race

This is something in history that can not be changed or erased

Instead we will move forward as one nation

To prove our ancestors we are strong

To prove to the old grumpy white men that they were wrong
